INTRODUCING BLOX – A DYNAMIC STONE CANDLEHOLDER WITH SHIFTING EXPRESSIONS

Building upon its growing collection of sculptural candle holders, Normann Copenhagen introduces Blox Candleholder, designed by German designer Ilja Huber. Defined by compelling materiality and dynamic expression, Blox explores the balance between form, weight, and function.

At first glance, Blox appears simple. Composed of three cylindrical blocks of stone, its geometry feels familiar yet subtly unexpected. Counterbalanced around a steel axis, each block can be rotated — allowing the cylinders to shift and rebalance in relation to one another. The result is a frozen moment of equilibrium that gives the piece its distinctive sculptural presence. Interactive by nature, Blox invites the user to determine the final composition, adjusting the juxtaposition of the blocks to match personal preference. Even without a candle, it stands confidently as an object in its own right.

Crafted from a mixture of marbles and travertine and available in two carefully curated stone combinations, Blox allows the beauty of the material to speak for itself. The depth and natural variation of the stone create visual richness, while its weight promises stability and durability.

For Ilja, design is not about decoration but about honesty — understanding how materials perform and how objects are used, and letting this knowledge guide the form. With Blox, visual expression, material, and function are inseparable. The result is a candleholder that is experimental yet refined, functional yet sculptural — a composition defined by visual balance.

This product is scheduled to be available online and in stores in September 2026.
